Imagination Stations Give Mythic Journeys Attendees
Chance To Participate In The Creation of Myth

Attendees will be able to craft their own art, poetry, music and stories during conference and performance festival

Atlanta, GA – Mythic Journeys 2006, MYTH AND IMAGINATION, will add a new dimension to attendees' experience with the addition of four to eight Imagination Stations during the second biennial conference and performance festival. These unique areas will give guests and attendees the opportunity to become a hands-on part of the myth-making process June 7-11, 2006, at the Atlanta Hyatt Regency Hotel.

The Imagination Stations are areas specifically designed to involve guests and attendees in the creative process of myth and story. They also will give Mythic Journeys attendees the chance to interact with guests, performers and each other. Individual stations will include a collage area, a station where attendees can make their own music and a station where guests can help create a community quilt, as well as areas devoted to composing poetry and stories.

“Art and community can emerge from these areas of creative space,” says Ashley Carter, coordinator of the Imagination Stations. “The stations were conceived as environments where performers and participants can come together for creative and spontaneous expression beyond the barrier of the stage, allowing conference participants a new level of experience.”
